IR Leader meets relatives of martyr scientists - 20 /Jan/ 2012

Islamic Revolution Leader Ayatollah Sayyed Ali Khamenei met with relatives of the assassinated Iranian nuclear scientist Mostafa Ahmadi Roshan Thursday night.

Ayatollah Khamenei said in the meeting that the elite martyrs are source of honor for the country, adding that the martyrs are worth to be honored for they had granted their scientific researches a spiritual and divine dimension and motivation and that the accomplishment made them deserved for the honor of martyrdom in the path of Allah.

Ayatollah Khamenei said Islam would make headways after any such martyrdom, adding that the revolutionary Iranian youths falsified an allegation by the enemy that the 1979 Islamic Revolution had closed the path of science and knowledge. "The country's youths took the stage of scientific researches and fielded their capacities to eventually falsify the enemy's libel," the IR Leader said.

Ayatollah Khamenei in a separate session met with the relatives of assassinated nuclear scientist Dariush Rezaeenejad where he underlined that the enemy assassination bids against the country's elite youths provided more proofs on how significant the Iranian accomplishments were.

"Today, the Islamic Republic's progress is a source of hope for Muslim nations and the young generation of Islamic countries," Ayatollah Khamenei added.
